Father, mother, daughter playing in the forest, same as any loving family.
But they are hunted not just by the encroaching human houses but a far more deadly foe,
the dreaded Witch of the South, along with her the deadly Northern Lights.

The witch wants to punish Bigfoot and his family. She hates love and she hates family, her own life is a constant pain.

Bigfoot awoke. His cave was quiet. He was always the first awake and loved hearing the sounds of his sleeping wife and child. But today was different, he heard nothing. He quickly arose and looked around the cave. They were gone. The witch he knew immediately she had taken them. He ran out the cave and looked around frantically. He let out a loud roar. He listened and heard nothing. He thought "go South to the witches lair. I have to find my family". Bigfoot headed south searching the tall forest, smashing rocks, looking for clues of his family's whereabouts. Suddenly the witch appears, Bigfoot ran but she was too fast. Quickly she warped him into the frozen forest. Shivering his giant hairy body was freezing cold. He traveled on heading south to find his family. Bigfoot started running only to see the witch again. Again, Bigfoot finds himself in the frozen forest at his lowest point. He wants to give up but he pictures his wife and child. Bigfoot roared. Angered by the vision he ran south faster until he came out of the forest and found a rock. He was ready. Near a small cabin the witch appeared. Bigfoot threw the rock killing the witch. Bigfoot had renewed energy. A little further, he smashed a boulder and saw his wife's arm. He broke the boulder completely and let out a giant roar as he found his family. He was happy but knew they had to return to their cave before night fell. They would have to fight the Northern Lights together. Bigfoot charged forward with wife and son in tow.
